

Course Title: Globalization and New Challenges to Peace
Status: Elective	Semester: 1 st	ECTS credits: 6	Course hours per week: 2 lectures
Name of teachers (lecturers, profesors): Prof. Nakarada Radmila
1. COURSE DESCRIPTION AND OBJECTIVES	The focus of the course is on explaining process of globalization, different interpretations of its nature and consequences, as well as detailed consideration of economic, political, technological, environmental and cultural interdependence of the world. Special attention will be devoted to the globalization agents and challenges. This course gives a realistic image of the global process, which includes its contradictory character and effects, and necessity of creative adaptation to globalization, particularly in small peripheral countries. Delineation of the worldwide scene will include new conflicts that globalization brings, as well as its potential for peace. Course objectives are to facilitate closer understanding of major processes that change the world map, to discern objective, unstoppable process of globalization from its historical forms, to understand the disparities and complex relations that bring new conflicts and weaken democracy at the global level. Students will be provided with insights on complex and contradictory nature of globalization which will enable them to overcome "theoretical nationalism" (U. Beck), by recognizing the interaction of internal and external forces in shaping of different societies. They will also become aware of conflict potential of globalization and become familiar with the characteristics of new conflicts that have emerged on the world stage (from postmodern to resource wars). Based on knowledge gained on multiple dimensions of globalization, students will be able to understand structural preconditions of peace (such as strengthening of global democracy, decrease of the dramatic gap between rich and poor, etc.), as well as potential ways of strategic thinking that can ensure peace and development of Serbia in the era of globalization.
